A BELATED CENSUS OF EARLIEST SETTLERS OF CAPE GIRARDEAU COUNTY, MISSOURI<sup>1</sup>

Copied and Compiled by REV. WM. J. GAMMON, Montreat, N. C.

A. INTRODUCTION

A. Cape Girardeau County.

That which is at present Cape Girardeau County, Missouri, is largely the same territory as Cape Girardeau District under the Spanish Government, except that Scott County was taken from this county in 1821, on the south, and Bollinger in 1851, on the west. The United States census of 1920 gives the area of this county as 581 square miles, or an area averaging about 24 miles long and the same in width, though the county is longer than that in some parts, not so wide in many others.

B. Early Settlers.

It is well known, that excepting the Indians, the Spanish were the earliest settlers of this and some adjoining counties, except some French who settled in what is now St. Genevieve County. After the purchase of Louisiana Territory in 1803 by the United States, settlers, largely of English, Swiss, and German origin, came very soon and in large numbers, principally from North Carolina, Kentucky, Virginia, and Maryland, also a few from the New England states, Tennessee, and Georgia.

The very large part of these early settlers were farmers, but in Cape Girardeau and Jackson there was quite a number of merchants, doctors and other professional men, and still others who operated tanneries and other industries. The present large German population came later—about 1838.

C. The Old Cemeteries of the County.

It is well known to the majority who observe, that the greater part of the first cemeteries, or burying grounds, not only in this state, but in many other sections of the south and central sections of the country, were on the farms, in the open country, and were largely family cemeteries at first. But as changes come in so many of life's customs, so it has in regard to the places of rest for our departed loved ones. The burying ground on the farm is rather rapidly passing out of existence and to a great extent for good reasons.

The condition of most of these old cemeteries is certainly deplorable, and especially when it is known that near relatives of reasonable means live within a few miles of many of them. Many are unfenced, live stock roam at liberty thru them and break and knock down the stones. Most of them are considerably overgrown, not only with weeds, but by vines, small trees, briars, etc.

In several instances the stones have been removed some distance from the original burying place and piled under trees and along the fence, so that the place of burial is unknown and is cultivated over. Many of these have not been used at all for forty, fifty, and more years.

D. Value of Data from the Old Cemeteries.

Organizations which are encouraging and aiding the collection of the data from stones in these old burying grounds are rendering a valuable service to the history of their nation, the states, and counties which compose it, as well as to a great multitude of individual citizens. Data from these old cemeteries, in this and other counties, will form an invaluable basis for a reliable history of the county at some future date. It is imperative that this data be gathered very soon, as much of it will soon disappear forever. It is already very difficult to read some of the inscriptions.

The very large majority of these old cemeteries are back in fields, off the roads; much walking is necessary to reach them; weeds, briars, bushes must be encountered; some of the stones must be dug from the ground, and broken ones must be placed together in order to read them. To read many of the inscriptions, it is necessary to use a magnifying glass, often a coarse scrub brush to remove moss and other obstructions, and frequently the inscription can be obtained only by a "rubbing" process. Very poor roads must be traveled to get within walking distance of some of these cemeteries; sometimes a mile-walk is necessary.

Every means have been employed to insure accuracy in the facts copied.

A friend from Portsmouth, O., who is doing this same type of work, writes that some of her own family think it is awful to do that kind of work, that she is out of her senses, but this shows little appreciation of history. But thus far, not one person has even intimated to me that they were unwilling to have any one enter their land to secure these data; they gladly gave information as to location, age, names, etc., of the burying grounds. In a few instances where roads were too bad, a request by letter has secured their aid to the extent that they copied and mailed the data, even though it was from their own family cemetery. Interest had been shown and great regret expressed that these old burying grounds are so badly neglected.

When making inquiry as to some roads with which he was not acquainted, the writer stopped at a house to inquire and visited a burying ground on an adjoining farm to which he was gladly welcomed, but where inquiry was made, one member of the farm suspected that something must be wrong when that type of seemingly strange work was being done, so asked the county sheriff what it meant. Previously the writer had asked the location of some burying grounds of the sheriff, so when visited, the sheriff laughed and said he understood.

E. Burying Grounds Visited.

At least one hundred and fifteen burying grounds have been visited, one or two of which were just across the line in Scott County, one just over in Perry County, two or three small ones in Bollinger County, where early settlers of this county were buried along with their close relatives. One or two old cemeteries in which the departed are interred, and are closely related to persons of this county, have been visited and data copied—Brazeau in Perry County and Potosi in Washington County are examples.

Thus far, more than 3200 names have been copied, with dates of birth and death, in this county. All parts of the county have been visited, careful inquiry has been made of many persons and of the oldest, best informed residents of the present and the past to locate all old burying grounds. The reason for copying data regarding infants, is that it shows that those parents lived in that general community at that date.<sup>2</sup>

It is generally well known to careful observers, that there are several types of stones, or markers, for the last resting places of our departed loved ones. Thus far, after consulting monument-makers here and writing to New England, it has not been possible to secure the technical names, or descriptions of the various types of stones in use at different ages in the past. Encyclopedias, World Books, etc., were also consulted with little help, but here is a crude description of one of the oldest, if not the oldest type found: a carefully built pile, or heap of stones over the grave, or on top of the grave, four or five feet high, about three-wide, and as long as the grave, with ends and sides very even, or straight, perpendicular, like an even wall. At the head there is a depression in the wall about three feet high, one and one half wide and four inches deep, to receive a stone marker, with name, etc. One of these was found in Potosi, Mo., at the old home of Governor Dunklin with markers in place, another is the Rumpfolt or Byrd cemetery in this county, but markers are missing.

The larger number of very old markers, or stones, are the slabs, some four or five feet long, one and one half or more wide, three inches thick, set in a mortise in a stone base. It is stated on good authority that quite a number of the very early graves were marked by an ordinary stone with no name or date on it, some of these being found in all old cemeteries. Another very old type of tombstone is a very large slab some six feet in length, four in width, in horizontal positions, supported by slabs on edge, four in number, two on each side, two at each end, the inscription being on top of this large slab.

<sup>2</sup> Where no parent was given on an inscription, these infants have been omitted in publishing the inscriptions, and the same is true where there are several infants interred, having the same parents. In other cases where the dates of interment would indicate that the parents tarried at least for several years additional children have been included.

Some inscriptions are badly faded, or worn away, but nearly all on the upright slabs can be clearly read.

In Old Apple Creek Cemetery is the date "18ZZ", likely intended for 1822. All varieties of spelling of names are found, often two different ways for the same name. The words "Father," "Mother," "Husband," "Wife," are often found as part of the inscription. In two cemeteries at least, something of religious belief is indicated in the inscription, as very seldom is it "died" but more often "entered into spirit life."

E. Key to the Location of Cemeteries.

For those who read these data and want to visit these cemeteries, the location is shown here in relation to some well known point in the county. The number before the name of the cemetery throughout this manuscript appears before, or in front of each name copied in that cemetery. As an illustration, if you find this—"5 Hays, Christopher," the 5 refers to Ware cemetery, and all names copied from that place will have a 5 in front of them. Following the number and the name of the cemetery, will be found some description as to its location, on the farm of a certain person, one who owns it at present, or in recent years. The numbers assigned to each cemetery from which inscriptions have been taken and the location of each follow:

Following, largely in alphabetical order, will be found the more than 3200 names gathered from cemeteries of Cape Girardeau County, with a few from adjoining counties. The number before each name in this list, is the number of the cemetery in which that name was found, the location of the cemetery being given on pages immediately preceding. The spelling of names and dates is given as found on the stones with, in a few instances, suggested corrections. Children under 16 are not listed except when they show family relationship not otherwise evident, or where their dates seem to indicate something of the extent of residence of their parents in the area. Many infants have been omitted especially where many in one family died in infancy.
